Counting is proving.

Some years ago there was a famous case of a smaller company 'Global Links Corporation' where a private shareholder continued to add so many cheap shares that he finally arrived at 100% of share capital. To his big surprise however, big selling continued and so this scandal and the reason for stock hammering was suddenly unfolded. Stockgate was born.

Unfortunately waiting for SEC is almost likely to wait until seeing an iceberg in very short distance.

Alcatel-Lucent unfortunately has a very big freefloat but I believe there is a relatively easy way for private shareholders to investigate themselves into possible massive (naked) stock dumping at ALU. Thanks to internet and shareholder boards such as Yahoo, Boursorama, IEX and so on reaching a lot of private shareholders shouldn't be too difficult. I read about single shareholders recently having added 50k and in some cases about 300k.

Imagine how many shares just the 11.500 Americans that get e-mail alerts on ALU from Seeking Alpha probably will have accumulated recently. Let's say 8.000 of them are holding Alcatel-Lucent shares now.

A rough guess would be that because of several relatively big shots, these private shareholders on average could possess 50.000 shares at the close of April 25. That alone would make a grand total of 400 million shares. And that's just the Seeking Alpha part of American shareholders!

Even in Germany W:O forum on Alcatel recently attracted many views.. and for Alcatel normally irrelevant Frankfurt exchange saw very unusual trading volumes. I myself being a Dutchman (living in Germany) noticed over IEX-forum that after February 9 a lot of Dutch private investors for the first time ever did buy into Alcatel.

In France the ALU community on Boursorama forum has crazy activity, so in France tens of thousands of private persons should recently have added Alcatel shares.

The more I thought of it, the more astonished I was of the continuous drop of Alcatel and the staggering selling volumes, which tended to never dry up.

My goal would be to count and prove as much as possible individual share holdings into a combined grand total.

I think February 9 (before Q4 numbers) and April 25 (before Q1 numbers) are the most appropriate dates to count the accumulated privately held totals and thus also would supply very interesting facts about additions in a period of only 11 weeks where over 3 billion (!) ALU stocks were sold in New York and Paris.

Counting privately held Alcatel shares will probably protect us much better against worst case scenarios, simply because of being able to cover them up.

As far as know this is never done before but I am convinced it could be a very effective way to unlock a big illegal shorting scheme, and if successful, the idea could easily be copied to other companies, where very suspect selling volumes compared to free float arise.

At least it is worth a try and I am prepared to spend a few weeks on it.

I hope to receive from as many ALU-shareholders as possible data on either the number of Alcatel-share they hold at the close of both February 9 and April 25.

- subject : ALU private share count
- please supply a single line mail in this format :
name, country, number at the close of February 9 2012, number at the close of April 25 2012,
- example : Jim Jones, USA, 20000, 70000 or
- example : F. Collard, France, 6000, 8000

Please do not use decimal points for thousands. It is very important to give precise numbers, while (eventually) it could be necessary to be able to prove the totals.

In a few weeks I hope to have accumulated the holdings of at least thousand private Alcatel shareholders, If we then were already to arrive at big adds in this particular period, that of course would be very explosive information.

Notes

* If you possibly sell/sold your shares after April 25, it still is very helpful to know the numbers you had as of both dates.

* It also is very important that the provided numbers are correct, since eventually it could be necessary to prove them if a class action or something was needed, e.g. in case of a dirt cheap takeover could be proven to be on bases of illegal stock printing.

* No data will in any way at any time appear on internet, they are completely safe.. on alcatel-shareholder.org just the anonymous numbers will appear of course.

* Thanks in advance.. and any suggestions very welcome of course, but please in a seperate mail (with another subject).

* If someone could translate the articles into French language, that would be very helpful.

Schöne Grüße von / best wishes from Iamfromgermany.
